Archbishop Williams plans Walsingham visit in 2004

The Walsingham idol is taken for a walk

Rowan Williams, the Archbishop of Canterbury has announced that he plans to take part in the annual Walsingham "pilgrimage" next May.

This is not surprising since he is an avid idolator and condones praying to Mary. In a press interview some time ago he referred to praying. "What I try to do is to take about half an hour to say the Jesus Prayer, which is what I use most regularly, the Orthodox form of prayer. That is simply repeating, 'O Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy on me a sinner,' using the prayer rope that eastern monks use."

He was asked if the prayer rope was something like rosary beads. "Yes. There are a hundred knots on the rope and you simply say the Jesus Prayer once for each knot."

Is it any wonder that the land is falling down before the idols of popery and Islam when such a man leads the "Church of England"?

Here is further cause of those who are true believers within that body to obey the call of God's Word and separate from this apostasy and stand with Christ outside the camp.
