

The Burning Bush—Online article archive

What of the abductors and murderers in Northern Ireland?

Police in the Irish Republic digging for bodies of IRA victims

The people of Ulster feel for the Chapman and Wells families with an understanding nurtured by experience. There are many a mother and father for whom the news of the tragedy in Soham has re-opened scarcely closed wounds within their own hearts.

During the past 30 years, terrorists have abducted and murdered many innocent victims, the bodies of whom have never been recovered and for whose murder no one has been apprehended. The perpetrators have been rewarded and honoured and that by the British Government, the ministers of which have been heard making sympathetic though hypocritical noises in the wake of the horrendous crime in Soham.

Sinn Fein/IRA have acknowledged that they abducted Roman Catholic men and women and murdered them on suspicion of giving evidence to the police on terrorist activity. Many of the families of these victims still do not know where the bodies of their loved ones were hidden and that despite great pressure being put on Sinn Fein/IRA's Gerry Adams and Martin McGuinness by the Roman Catholic community and the Dublin government.

The roles that these two men played in the IRA's terror campaign has been widely documented. As the leaders of Nazi Germany were deemed guilty of the crimes carried out by their underlings, even so may these men be deemed guilty of the crimes carried out by the IRA. But far from being punished, the British Government, by lies and deceit, forced Sinn Fein/IRA into the government of Northern Ireland against the wishes of the majority of people here. Martin McGuinness is currently Minister of Education in Northern Ireland, in charge of all our little Hollys and Jessicas!

Is it likely, should the pair presently charged in connection with the Soham murders be proved guilty, that they will be given high political office by the British government? The idea is gross and offensive!

Yet, such is the nature of things in this part of the United Kingdom.

The Burning Bush—Online article archive

The Burning Bush—Online article archive

The Burning Bush—Online article archive

