

The Burning Bush—Online article archive

It's Official - The Queen Is A Parrot!

Dr. Paisley was briefly criticised for calling the Queen a parrot of Tony Blair's government, when she recently expressed her desire to see the present policies in Northern Ireland succeeding. She is, of course, not her own master when it comes to constitutional and political issues. She can only voice the views of the current elected government. This is best illustrated by the "Queen's Speech" at the start of each new legislative session of parliament, when she declares what legislative plans "her" government hope to carry through. These she must espouse, irrespective of what her personal views on the legislation may be.

But now it has been revealed by a leading daily newspaper that she is more than just a constitutional parrot. She is a very good mimic of those public figures she has met during her lifetime.

Impression

It appears that one of the best impersonations that she does is of Dr. Paisley. Thus she has not only demonstrated that he was right in what he said, but she has paid him the ultimate compliment of imitation!

