Blair plans further institutionalising of sodomy

The Queen reads her speech to the assembled members of both Houses of Parliament.

One of the proposals Tony Blair's government announced in the Queen's Speech is called The Civil Partnership Bill. It will enable sodomite "civil partners" to sign a document entitling them to the same legal rights as married couples. Individuals could also benefit from a dead partner's pension, and a form of divorce could end the agreement.

The proposed new legislation must be seen as a placating of prominent sodomites within the Labour party such as Peter Mandelson, the former cabinet minister and close associate of Tony Blair. The proposed law has been welcomed by sodomite groups but is opposed by some Christian organisations. Deputy Minister for Women and Equality, Jacqui Smith, said last week: "Same-sex couples have been invisible in the eyes of the law for too long. The right to be treated equally and fairly is fundamental". A spokesman for the sodomite group Outreach said the Bill was warmly welcomed. "It is long overdue and will allow thousands of lesbian and gay couples to have the same rights as straight couples."

David Allison from the sodomite group Stonewall also welcomed the bill, but said gay couples' pensions rights should not be postponed until 2010, as is currently specified.

Some Christian groups are expected to oppose the introduction of the bill. The Free Presbyterian Church of Ulster has long campaigned against the legalising of that which God has condemned as an abomination and it will view this proposal as a further evidence of the nation's departure from God and of the moral bankruptcy of Tony Blair's government

Don Horrocks, of the Evangelical Alliance, said that his Alliance was "deeply concerned by the proposals. Whilst it isn't being called marriage it's the creation of a relationship that is marriage in all but name, all the rights without the commitment. It undermines the institution of marriage."

The former Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr George Carey recently said that there was nothing "sinister" about same sex relationships or homosexuality. But he added he did not want to see gay "civil partnership" to be referred to as marriage. It is the likes of George Carey and the other leaders of apostate religion who have hastened the day of the public acceptance of this abomination and the further decline in the affairs of the nation, as the judgment of God will surely follow such a development just as surely as it fell upon Sodom and Gomorrah.

Sadly, few give much credence to the Word of God. However, that does not alter its eternal effectiveness. Men like Blair may propose the overthrow of God's laws but those laws will be seen to stand in the day when He calls all men and nations to an account. These new proposals will bring further evidences of divine disapproval, which, in turn, are only a foreshadowing of that final display of judgment against such abomination.

"And Rehoboam the son of Solomon reigned in Judah. . . . And Judah did evil in the sight of the LORD, and they provoked him to jealousy with their sins which they had committed, above all that their fathers had done. For they also built them high places, and images, and groves, on every high hill, and under every green tree. And there were also sodomites in the land: and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the LORD cast out before the children of Israel," 1 Kings 14:21-24.

Such proposals as this new The Civil Partnership Bill must be seen as the United Kingdom doing "evil in the sight of the Lord."
