Three die in sodomite pub bomb

A third bombing in London, this time of a pub frequented by sodomites, has killed three people. A 22-year-old engineer has been remanded in custody in connection with the three nail bombings. David Copeland, from Cove near Farnborough, Hampshire, appeared at West London Magistrates Court charged with three murders and three counts of causing explosions with intent to endanger life.

One will watch with interest to see if anyone who is convicted of the bombings and murders will be sentenced to life and then released after a short time and given a place in Tony Blair's government. Why not? After all, that is Mr. Blair's policy here in Ulster. Why should it not be his policy in London?
